Introduction.

The tendency to create national educational standards has been characteristic in recent years for education systems in many countries of the world. Similar documents in Uzbekistan with such a wide scope of application are the Constitution and laws, in particular, the Law of the Republic of Uzbekistan "On Education". The dream and desire of every student, as well as any person studying a foreign language, is the ability to speak correctly and express their thoughts in the language they are interested in.

The main part.

Teaching any discipline requires a number of responsibilities and efforts from the teacher and the trainee. The teacher's responsibilities include the choice of a specific methodology and a suitable teaching method, the selection of assignments for each type of educational activity, teaching aids, taking into account the level of knowledge of the trainees, and much more. Effort, seriousness and responsibility are required from the trainees. The difference between teaching foreign languages and other disciplines is that through language we express our thoughts and feelings. Our thoughts and feelings are not limited in the classroom, in the laboratory, in research, they are always and everywhere with us. This also suggests that you should not only correctly learn foreign languages, but also correctly express your thoughts in your native language. "If the development of the native language begins with the free spontaneous use of speech and ends with the consciousness of speech forms and mastering them, then the development of a foreign language begins with the awareness of the language and voluntary mastery of it and ends with spontaneous speech" [2, p. 58]. The native language is acquired simultaneously with the appropriation of social experience. In Uzbek universities, the Russian language study program, as well as other foreign languages, includes in-depth study of grammar, phonetics and lexical composition of the language, more and more emphasis is placed on teaching the language system and mainly grammar. As before, the main difficulties are the lack of active oral practice per student of the group, the study of the Russian language should be based on the development of students' speech skills as a result of oral exercises, and theoretical study should give way to the development of practical skills. It is necessary to teach students not only the basics of the Russian language, but also to teach them to communicate with interest and correctly in another language both within the framework of professional topics and in everyday life situations. Teaching Russian as a foreign language is now being carried out in the context of global changes throughout the education system - the goals of learning the language have changed, students' needs, learning conditions. It must be admitted that there has also been a transition of quantitative changes into qualitative ones, work with the masses of students has transformed into more individualized work, when students themselves began to determine not only the linguistic, but also the cultural component of the learning process [3, p. 115]. The main purpose of teaching a foreign language is not so much teaching the language system (linguistic competence) as mastering communicative competence, i.e. the ability of a person to carry out speech communication in a particular field of activity by means of the language being studied. The basis of communicative competence is a complex of language knowledge and speech skills and abilities that formed during classes [4, p.154]. Priority is given to the student's independent work, which involves, firstly, a careful study of additional theoretical materials and educational Internet resources for each topic, self-checking with the help of questions and tests given at the end of the topic, as well as the mandatory completion of practical tasks. As for the remaining 50%, depending on the students, it should be noted that whatever new innovative method the teacher would choose for the student in order to increase his practical mastery of the language, much depends on him, on his diligence, diligence and ingenuity. For the most meaningful and inspiring lesson will not be able to last more than an hour and a half. At the end of the lesson, the student is left alone with his diligence and imagination behind the doors of the auditorium and the university. Based on the above, students can be advised to follow the famous saying "Repetition is the mother of learning". The more they repeat the material they have covered, going deeper into it, the better they will be able to remember it. This is due to the emergence of the labor market, competition in Uzbekistan for specialists from domestic and foreign vocational schools in order to bring the level of graduates of domestic educational institutions to the level of professional competence of a foreign specialist.

Conclusion.

The modern methodology of teaching the Russian language in the universities of Uzbekistan recognizes that the difficulties of mastering words, on the one hand, are associated with the peculiarities of the lexical system of the Russian language itself, and on the other hand, with the specifics of the vocabulary of the students' native language. Since words in the Russian language do not exist in isolation, but in connection with others, students study vocabulary in interrelation, in comparison, which facilitates the process of mastering the material. In the learning process, a large place should be given to the semantics of words, since it is associated with the correct understanding of the word and its use in speech. The living word of the teacher, his direct appeal to students, the possibility of constant feedback - all this has undoubted advantages. It should always be remembered: no matter what technical means we use, the teacher remains the central figure in the educational process, and he needs to carefully monitor his speech, have a good, clear pronunciation, and avoid grammatical and stylistic errors.
